

London, United Kingdom (ABN Newswire) - With China's air pollution regulations coming into effect last week, there is much speculation about how production cuts will affect the global market, and has already seen the LME price rise.

CRU's World Aluminium Conference 2017 takes place on 3-5 May 2017, in London, UK, where CRU's Assistant Chief Representative China Office & Head of Asia, Aluminum, Wan Ling, and Chalco's Executive Director & Senior Vice President, Lu Dongliang, will be discussing the likely outcomes of these regulations on the local and global markets.

This year's conference will address sustainability in the aluminium sector, focusing on how environmental and economic strategies interact and the business opportunities created. Plus, you'll get an expert update on the outlook for markets, prices and premiums.

In addition to the two and a half days of topical conference programming, the 2017 conference sees the introduction of two workshops; Aluminium Price Risk Management, and a Cast-house Workshop, to give you even more value. See the website for more details.
