"We are pleased to welcome Red Conger to Newmont's Board of Directors. Throughout his distinguished career, he has gained a wealth of unparalleled experience in the mining sector and strategic insights. Red brings significant operational leadership to Newmont's Board," said Tom Palmer, Newmont President and CEO.

Prior to Teck, Red spent more than a decade at Freeport-McMoRan, ending his tenure at the company as President and Chief Operating Officer, Americas. He began his mining career at Kennecott Copper's Bingham Canyon mine, followed by more than two decades at Phelps Dodge Corp., where he oversaw mining and processing across multiple operations in North America and South America. Across his various roles, Red excelled at creating operational efficiencies and supporting stable production throughout challenging cycles.

In addition to his corporate roles, Red continues to be an active leader across the broader mining industry, at organizations such as the National Mining Association where he previously served as Chairman, and the New Mexico Mining Commission where he previously served as Commissioner. He has been recognized for his leadership and contributions to the mining industry, reflected in a variety of industry awards, including most recently being elected to the National Academy of Engineering.
