Meet the Executive Shaping the Mining Landscape

'Inside the Boardroom' is more than just an interview series - it's a chance to gain firsthand knowledge from industry leaders, understanding their vision, challenges, and strategy.

We caught up with Francois Motte Sauter, CFO of Aclara Resources Inc. (TSX: ARA), to discuss how the company is building a mine-to-magnet supply chain for heavy rare earths that bypasses China's dominance in the market. Aclara is advancing rare ionic clay deposits in both Brazil and Chile, with the flagship Carina project in Brazil targeting a pre-feasibility study in October and 2028 production start, feeding into planned US-based separation facility to supply dysprosium and terbium for electric vehicles and permanent magnets. Aclara is also working on producing rare earth metals and alloys that meet the specifications required by permanent magnet manufacturers, particularly in the electric vehicle (EV) sector. The facility will use rare earth oxides from Aclara's mining and separation processes to manufacture high-purity alloys tailored to magnet production.
